Leaf™ Light

A NEW WAY OF LOOKING AT LIGHT

Everything looks better in the right light. The Leaf light gives the choice of what's right to each individual. Herman Miller and designer Yves Béhar achieved this by putting the person in charge of the technology. A simple touch control allows an easy change from warm to cool light. It also lets the individual choose the light intensity and color that best suit a mood, a task, or a location. The slim profile of Leaf houses innovations that keep the LED light cool to the touch without requiring a fan to dissipate heat. And, true to its name, Leaf is kind to the world—minimal materials, LED efficiency, and Design for the Environment protocol combine to ensure Leaf is as sustainable as it is illuminating.

INDIVIDUAL CONTROL

Leaf puts control in people's hands, or more accurately, their fingertips. Sliding a finger along a groove in the light's base adjusts intensity or changes light from warm to cool. The individual can position Leaf for direct lighting or fold it for subtle, ambient light.

TURNING ON THE TECHNOLOGY

Leaf addresses one aspect of LED lights that has limited their use—the intense heat they produce and the noisy fans required to dissipate it. Leaf handles this issue with a proprietary heat distribution system that operates silently because it eliminates the need for a fan.

KIND TO THE ENVIRONMENT

Leaf uses less of the world's resources to give better light. It consumes 12 watts of power, about 40 percent less than compact fluorescent lights, and it sheds full light for up to 60,000 hours. Developed using Herman Miller's Design for the Environment protocol, Leaf has minimal impact on the earth.
